"Perhaps all the dragons in our lives are princesses who are only waiting to see us act, just once, with beauty and courage. Perhaps everything that frightens us is, in its deepest essence, something helpless that wants our love."

Oscar Wilde once said “I regard the theatre as the greatest of all art forms, the most immediate way in which a human being can share with another the sense of what it is to be a human being.” Therefore, it makes sense to use theatre to bring folk tales to life. Folk tales are, after all, the story of who we are, where we’ve been, and what we have believed through time. They are a reflection of humanity’s shared experience, our cultural mirror. That the image we see is often ugly, scary, or confusing is merely part of our identity. Other times, the image is one of breathtaking beauty. This too, is part of our identity. Where better to examine these identities than on a stage?

Theatre is the quintessential communal act. It is an event where people of all races, creeds, and cultures gather to share a story. And we are more than passive observers to this event. We experience and, even more, create the story. Like the actors on the stage, each of us has our own role to play in this communal act: we are witnesses, there to see and hear and judge. And we, as witnesses, have the overwhelming power to influence the proceedings. (Just ask any actor about the energy a live audience brings to their performance.) The illusion the actor weaves on the stage is nothing without the collective imagination of the audience to make it real. And it is real; as real as if we had lived it, because for that moment in the communal act, we feel the truth. There is authenticity beneath the illusion. And then the lights go, the curtain comes down, and the spell is broken, but we remain changed; we are no longer who we were. We have experienced something; something like an adventure. We have dreamed, and laughed, and fought, and danced, and wept, and learned about who we are. And we shared that journey with one another.

In the theatre, we gather together to share our sense of what it is to be a human being. Though the conversation comes to a close when the lights go down, the communication continues long after the lights come back up. In the end, the stories we tell, the folk tales, are us.

The Kennedy Center
American College Theater Festival (KCACTF)

Started in 1969 by Roger L. Stevens, the Kennedy Center's founding chairman, the Kennedy Center American College Theater Festival (KCACTF) is a national theater program involving 18,000 students from colleges and universities nationwide which has served as a catalyst in improving the quality of college theater in the United States. The KCACTF has grown into a network of more than 600 academic institutions throughout the country, where theater departments and student artists showcase their work and receive outside assessment by KCACTF respondents.

The goals of the Kennedy Center American College Theater Festival are: to encourage, recognize, and celebrate the finest and most diverse work produced in university and college theater programs; to provide opportunities for participants to develop their theater skills and insight; and achieve professionalism; to improve the quality of college and university theater in America; to encourage colleges and universities to give distinguished productions of new plays, especially those written by students; the classics, revitalized or newly conceived; and experimental works.

Through state, regional, and national festivals, KCACTF participants celebrate the creative process, see one another's work, and share experiences and insights within the community of theater artists. The KCACTF honors excellence of overall production and offers student artists individual recognition through awards and scholarships in playwriting, acting, criticism, directing, and design.

The KCACTF is a year-round program in eight geographic regions in the United States. Regional activities are coordinated through eight KCACTF regional chairs and eight KCACTF playwriting awards chairs. With funding and administrative support from the Kennedy Center, the regional chair coordinates with the Co-Managers of KCACTF all aspects of the adjudication of productions on the local and regional level and supervises regional-level KCACTF award competitions. The playwriting chair works with schools that have entered new and student-written plays by providing expertise in the development of new scripts—assessment specifically designed for a developing play—and by providing information on the numerous playwriting awards offered.

In January and February of each year, regional festivals showcase the finest of each region's entered productions and offer a variety of activities, including workshops, symposia, and regional-level award programs. Regional festival productions are judged by a panel of three judges selected by the Kennedy Center and the KCACTF national committee. These judges in consultation with the Artistic Director select four to six of the best and most diverse regional festival productions to be showcased in the spring at the annual noncompetitive national festival at the Kennedy Center, all expenses paid.

Since its inception, KCACTF has given more than 400,000 college theater students the opportunity to have their work critiqued, improve their dramatic skills and receive national recognition for excellence. More than 16 million theatergoers have attended approximately 10,000 festival productions nationwide.
