Department Overview

The international business major at the University of Wisconsin-La Crosse was one of the first in the state with a focus on the global nature of business in the twenty-first century. The program was the outcome of an effort by faculty to address the long-term needs of businesses that operate in an international environment and also to contribute to students' development as citizens of an increasingly "global" world.

The major is not housed in one department, but rather inter-departmental in design to represent the nature of international business. Faculty come from departments across the College of Business Administration.

Faculty in the College of Business Administration have the international orientation necessary to teach International Business. Many teaching in this program have extensive international experience and are fluent in non-English languages.

COLLEGE OF BUSINESS ADMINISTRATION

Department Features

Graduates of the IB program should be able to function as decision-makers in more than one culture. They will be able to communicate in more than one language, integrate within cultures other than their own, and manage and be managed by people from other cultures.

The international business major (IB) is interdepartmental, and includes key courses from both the College of Business Administration and College of Liberal Studies.

It is designed for students to develop knowledge of global business and the cultural context of business. Students will have the opportunity to develop both breadth and depth of understanding in the global context.

An international business major requires students to complete the international business major course requirements and a “concentration” of four courses (12 credits) at the 300 or 400 level in a second functional business department or to double major, i.e., accounting, economics, finance, information systems, management or marketing.

IB majors will also become proficient in a second language, and complete an out-of-country experience of at least three weeks’ duration.

Students will study topics such as international economics, marketing, management, finance, and the law of international business transactions. They will also choose electives from various international courses, including such topics as comparative management systems; international human resource management; business, labor and human rights; and international financial economics.

The opportunity also exists for majors to participate in internships abroad, as part of their out-of-country experience.

Many international business majors also choose to complete majors and minors in their proficiency language, such as Spanish, French, and German. The university also offers language courses in Russian and Chinese to an intermediate level.

Faculty advisers specifically assigned to students in this program help guide them with selecting course requirements, choosing their concentration area, preparing for the out-of-country experience, and various other components associated with the degree program as a whole. In addition, faculty advisers will help students in the career search process.

Career Opportunities

Graduates pursue business careers domestically and around the world in areas such as human resources, market research, budget analysis, investment and corporate financial planning, programming information technology, promotion and sales, taxation, public accounting, production and operations.

Because international business majors have concentrations in a variety of business areas, entry-level career placement reflects that area. Some career fields or job titles include:

- Financial Analyst
- Broker
- Management Trainee
- Human Resource Manager
- Programmer Analyst
- Communications Specialist
- Information Systems Managers
- Translation
- Market Analyst
- Investment and Global Trading
- Sales and Procurement
- Business Analyst
- Accounting Management Trainee
- Public or Staff Accountant
- Bank Examiner
- Corporate Auditor
- Advertising Manager
- Public Relations

Occupational Outlook

Graduates with an international business degree gain an understanding of global social issues that will position them well to advance in the professional world and become world citizens.

Knowledge of trade, foreign policy and world geography will be important factors. Increased privatization in east central Europe, China and the former Soviet Union has increased demand for graduates who understand the global economy.

Data from federal, state and local sources suggest that over half of new jobs have some international component, and these positions earn a premium salary over others.

ADVICE FROM OUR GRADUATES:

“Since success depends mostly on the way in which you deal with people, your international success depends upon your ability to be a communicator and in understanding the other people and their cultures. Like a good relationship, you want to get the best possible understanding of the people you are dealing with.”

“International business classes allow people to understand cultures unlike their own. This is helpful when dealing with clients domestically, as well as internationally. The classes helped me to realize that while certain things are acceptable in the U.S., they may not be in other countries. This is invaluable in international business.”

“Once I began my actual work experience, I was shocked to find out how much of what I had studied actually did apply. Being aware of, as well as accepting the differences in cultures and assuming nothing, are the most valuable lessons one can take from their international business education.”
